Preserving History to remember an important story

Many Americans helped with the War Effort to supply our troops and allies with what was required to win the war. Civilians became engineers, mechanics, riveters and welders during the 1940's. As men were called to duty, their families stepped forward to fill the essential tasks required to keep America running.

Seniors, wives, daughters and sons filled the factories left vacant to keep production running none stop, with production numbers that were and still are hard to imagine possible of achieving.

Car production facilities began producing tanks. Airplane manufacturers started producing flying fortresses. And a massive effort by average citizens helping by collecting raw material to recycle into the production process. Tin cans to comic books...everyone became involved with the American Experience of the 1940's.
